

May 17-20, 2017

www.anthropologyoftheanthropocene.org

IUPUI Arts & Humanities Institute
4th floor IUPUI Library
755 W. Michigan Ave.,
UL 4115S
Indianapolis, IN 46202

ANTHROPOLOGY OF THE ANTHROPOCENE

THEORIES, STRUCTURES, PRACTICES

Anthropology of the Anthropocene: Structures, Theories, Practices is a workshop that brings together anthropologists and leading thinkers in policy, theory, philosophy, science, art, humanities, urban planning, and law who have been tackling the sociocultural frameworks and experiences of the Anthropocene. The goal of this workshop is to tackle large multidisciplinary and transdisciplinary questions about anthropology's role in the Anthropocene as we collectively examine how new research methods might advance current theoretical and applied frameworks.

This workshop is funded by the Indiana University New Frontiers in the Arts & Humanities Program and The Wenner-Gren Foundation.

Wenner-Gren
Foundation

IUPUI

CALL FOR WORKSHOP APPLICANTS

"Anthropology of the Anthropocene: Structures, Theories, Practices"

May 17-20, 2017

IUPUI Arts and Humanities Institute (IAHI)

Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis (IUPUI)

755 W. Michigan Ave. UL 4115S; Indianapolis, IN 46202; USA

iahi@iupui.edu

www.anthropologyoftheanthropocene.org

We seek applications from scholars (including PhD candidates) from across the disciplines to participate in the workshop Anthropology of the Anthropocene: Structures, Theories, Practices, which will take place at the IUPUI Arts and Humanities Institute (IAHI) on May 17-20, 2017. This workshop is supported by the Wenner-Gren Foundation and Indiana University's New Frontiers in the Arts and Humanities grant program.

Those who are invited to participate in the workshop will have the following expenses covered:

- Roundtrip economy airfare
- Hotel (3 nights)
- Roundtrip airport pick up in Indianapolis
- Breakfast and lunches each day
- Per diem

We will also host two evening receptions (Wednesday and Friday) and one participant dinner (Thursday).

Anthropology of the Anthropocene: Structures, Theories, Practices is designed to bring together anthropologists who have been tackling the sociocultural frameworks and experiences of the Anthropocene and to place them in conversation with leading thinkers in policy, theory, philosophy, science, art, humanities, urban planning, and law. The goal is to address large multidisciplinary and transdisciplinary questions about anthropology's role in the Anthropocene and to collectively examine how new research methods might advance current theoretical and applied frameworks. The following are core-framing questions for the workshop: (1) In what ways are anthropological methods, theories, and practices responsive to the Anthropocene?; (2) How do we bridge disciplinary boundaries to advance critical and timely sociocultural research on changing earth systems and the human experience?; (3) How are we preparing the next generation of researchers with the right tools, frameworks, and language to design relevant ethnographies?; and (4) What should a publicly engaged Anthropology of the Anthropocene look like? This workshop will result in several outputs, most notably an edited volume.

We encourage participants from all fields, levels of expertise, and geographical regions to apply.

To submit your application, please complete this form:

<https://goo.gl/forms/MKeoxeC1TRD9x6u93>

DEADLINE is February 25, 2017, at midnight Eastern Time Zone

Successful applicants will be notified on or before March 15, 2017, so that travel arrangements can be made.